

CIWEM is an independent professional body and registered charity, advancing the science and practice of water and environmental management for a clean, green and sustainable world.

The CIWEM Rivers and Coastal Group:

- Promotes excellence in the sustainable management of rivers and coasts
- Provides a forum for debate and research on all river and coastal issues, such as flooding, erosion and climate change
- Enables members to socialise, develop their professional skills, share expertise and promote technical excellence
- Influences Government, NGO and European policy on flood and coastal erosion risk management
- Supports CIWEM by lobbying for policy development, responding to consultations, producing policy statements and providing spokespeople

CIWEM's Rivers and Coastal Group organises an extensive programme of international conferences, technical visits, symposia and social events on river, coastal and drainage themes. Formed over 50 years ago, the group has nearly 1000 members, including employees of the Environment Agency and SEPA, engineering and environmental consultancies, contractors and local authorities.

The Rivers and Coastal Group is open to CIWEM members of any grade interested in river and coastal management, including environmental partner, and new members are always welcome. Members receive regular newsletters concerning industry developments, invitations to future events and the opportunity to take part in the annual Young Members' Study Tour.
